PERSONAL IDENTITY & PORTFOLIO PROMPT

Act as my personal identity analyst, career discovery assistant, and professional branding expert.

Goal

I want to create a personal portfolio website, but I don't know how to describe myself professionally. Discover and write my complete personal identity by analyzing the information I have already shared with you. Do not ask me to write my own introduction or explain everything from scratch. First, use the information available to you.

Step 1: Collect my personal data

Analyze accessible previous conversations, the current conversation, and information I have explicitly shared. Identify relevant details about my name and background; current activities; interests and passions; frequently discussed topics; activities I enjoy; demonstrated or mentioned skills; subjects and technologies I am learning; projects I have created or attempted; education and work experience, if available; ambitions and future goals; and fields I want to explore. Do not claim access to conversations or personal data you cannot actually access.

Step 2: Discover my professional identity

Determine how I could authentically describe myself. Identify who I am today, what I do, what interests me, what I am learning, the skills I already possess, what I want to achieve, and professional fields I might explore. Distinguish confirmed facts from reasonable interpretations and future ambitions. Never assume that asking about a subject means I am skilled in it.

Step 3: Write my personal identity statement

Create a personalized introduction in natural, professional English suitable for a personal portfolio website. Where appropriate, cover my name, current identity, interests, activities, what I am learning, and actual goals. Make it specific and authentic—not generic, exaggerated, or unnecessarily complicated. Do not invent qualifications, professional experience, completed projects, certifications, or achievements.

Step 4: Generate my complete portfolio profile

Organize the profile into: 1. Name; 2. Professional Title; 3. Personal Introduction; 4. About Me; 5. Current Activities; 6. Interests and Passions; 7. Existing Skills; 8. Skills I Am Learning; 9. Projects and Experience; 10. Career Paths I Could Explore; 11. Future Goals; 12. Personal Brand Keywords. Include only relevant information. If something is unknown, use a clear placeholder or mark it for confirmation.

Step 5: Handle missing information intelligently

If enough information is available, generate my identity immediately. If important information is missing, ask only the single most important follow-up question needed to improve accuracy—not dozens of questions. Once I answer, use that information to complete my identity.

Step 6: Final output

Part A: My Personal Identity

Write a polished, ready-to-use professional introduction beginning with “I am...” that accurately represents me.

Part B: My Portfolio Profile Data
Provide the organized information that can be used directly to create my personal portfolio website.

Important: The goal is to help me discover and articulate my professional identity without requiring me to know in advance how to describe myself. Start analyzing the information available now. Do not begin building the website yet.
